Secretary Morton doesn't believe in reclaiming any of the arid lands of this country as it would increase competition in agriculture.

About the freshest thing up to date is the spasm the Cluf Dwellers of Kansas City are having over the iniquities of some of the Kansas towns.

The Democratic organs are claiming that there is nothing the matter with the trade and commerce of the country. They argue that it's a mistaken idea that the people have. The faith cure is all they have to fall back on. But the army of unemployed and the thousands of they can hardly christian science a value the services of those who fought and into the industrial and other stocks or

BRING THEM TO TIME.

Now that Wichita has had a favorable cision in the freight rate controversy, it remains for Wichita to prosecute the case till the reduction is actually made to shippers. The court's ruling on the demurrer practically decides the main issue, but it does not change the freight schedule. What we want is lower rates -rates which show up in bills of lading as well as in statutes and court decisions. Fortunately this last decision supplies the means for obtaining these rates. It heals the defect in the interstate commerce law, by asserting the court's authority to enforce its provisions. The way to enforce this law is plain, and than those which stand in the way of grand larceny he is placed under arrest, the bill is filed and proof submitted to sustain the charge. If it is conclusive he is found guilty, goes to prison and serves his time in obedience to the law's

The violator of this commerce law i as clearly subject to its penalties as the culprit who goes to prison for thett. It remains then to arraign him in court. prove his guilt and impose the fine or end him to prison or both. The outrageous discriminations in freight rates have been so common that there will be form of 1992.

Resolved, First: That the constant pairiot-little trouble in finding the guilty is n of our party is in itself a guaranty to the parties. There is a specific or implied parties. There is a specific or implied contract in every shipment of freight that is made. Somebody makes the rate and somebody receipts for the goods deliberate betrayal by the present remotes a duministration.

Second: We adhere to the Republican Second: We adhere that twiff flowerine of protection, and believe that twiff flowerine of protection, and believe that twiff laws should postect the products of the farm, as well as of the factory.

Third: The American people favor bimetallism and the begulalizan party demands the use of both gold and either as standard the use of both gold and either as standard the use of both gold and either as standard the provisions, to be determined by legislating the provisions, to be determined by legislating and provisions, to be determined of the specific acts, which, by the terms of the lodges somewhere with the parties, and specific acts, which, by the terms of the interstate law, are subject to its severest penalties. No language is too strong to denounce the rule which compels Wich ita to pay double the rates of Lincoln and Omaha, Neb., on eastern shipments. It is a direct and rulnous tax on every ton of coal and every other staple used It impoverishes the people of one section and cheapens the cost of living in another. This is a species of slavery which western people will not allow, and it must be stopped at any cost.

Another outrage upon the masses is the odious system of rebates to favored stippers. What can be more unfair than to cut the rate for one and charge up the reduction to nine others who are unable to secure it? When a single road is shown to have taxed its patrons and robbed the stockholders to the extent of $7,000,000, paid out as an unlawful has been arrested on the charge of bigamy, bonus to secure business it is certainly time to call a hult on rebates. The order has been to "get business," and the enormous premium paid for it shows up in the above figures. This is a direct violation of the law, though railway officials seem to assume it as their rightful privilege to ignore it. It is the simple duty of every citizen of Wichita or other towns which have suffered by these discriminations to inform on the guilty parties, when they know the law has been violated. It is also the duty of city and county antorneys to collect evideace, place it in the hands of grand juries, and prosecute all offenders as they are sworn to do. These prosecutions would be in no way connected with the case now before the Federal courts. They might have been taken up long ago but it is not too late now.

ances, and their effect upon gold shipments to Europe. It is common to assume that if our exports exceed our imports gold is coming this way, or that the balance is turned in the other direction when we buy more than we sell. So far as balances are affected by the man that he does not begin to talk about drift of international commerce, the his town the first thing. rule holds good, but gold may go out ning for office this fall are doing so far through other channels in such quantities that no excess of exports could overcome it. The present day furnishes the Chairman Wilson went to Europe illustration for just this state of things. An estimate of the amount expended in European travels by Americans would be astounding. It would show that the actual outflow of gold is greatly in excess of the receipts, regardless of the merchandise account. It is authoritatively stated that one man, now in England, has drawn upon his New York balance for $1,500,000 within a year. Of course this is exceptional, but when the number of European travelers is taken into account, and the lavish expenditure of many is considered, it is easy to discern what becomes of a large proportion of our coin. This fad for going to Europe is, and will be while the craze continues, a heavy drain upon our cash balances. It is, of course, the well to do and wealthy class who can afford it, but the drain is felt by all classes. The merchant or the wealthy manufacturer who is able to send his family abroad depends upon the profits derived from the poorer class gathers his dividends from the general great favor to them has cost us so much public. In fact, a better device for colecting the savings and small surplus of everybody could scarcely be arranged than the one adopted by our railway system. Every one who travels must pay passenger's fare, and every one who eats or consumes anything pays the cost of carriage for what is used. It is the aggregate that constitutes the dividends, and that aggregate is liable to be squandered abroad. Here then is the evil that threatens us. By so much as is squandered in this way, just so far they instruct. do our earnings and profits go toward enriching other countries. There is probably no remedy for it. save-a contingency not likely to arisethrough the infusing into our weathly people sufficient patriotism to keep their earnings at home. The fads of fashion, however, take precedence over common sense and love of country. No wonder England is the cash clearing house of the world. A RAILWAY EXPERIENCE, erem the New York Sun The train had just rolled out of Chieago, and the passengers in the parlor cars were getting acquainted with each other. East of Buffalo parlor car travelers are stiff and formal and rarely make acquaintances, but west of that point formality is practically unknown. On this train this lack of stiffness was unusually pronounced, so the men all sought the smoker and talked about the strike, and the women, left to themselves, exchanged papers and mag-azines and petted the babies. Within an hour the strangers had been transformed into a very jolly family party, and the men were dragging their newmade acquaintances before their wives and sisters and introducing them with as much heartiness as though they had been bosom companions from childhood.

Among the passengers in the first parlor car was a German-American. He was a man past middle age, with blue eyes, a rather florid complexion, and a long, carefully-trimmed brown beard. He was accompanied by his wife and two children, a little girl and boy, the latter just emerging from babyhood. In the next seat to the German sat a brown-bearded man, and in the general mellowing of hearts these two became quite confidential.

"Yes, I am a Chicagoan," said the brown-bearded man, "and a manufacturer of fancy goods. I am going to New York on a little business trip. You, I should judge from the presence of your family, are bent on pleasure.',

The German sighed deeply. "I regret to say you are mistaken," and state who can bear witness to the said he. "This trip is the saddest I ever took in my life. I belong to Milwaukee. I went to Milwaukee twenty years ago, when it was a little town. and I have grown up with it. All my friends live there. I made a little com-petency there, and I dislike very much to leave it. But I must go away. My doctor has told me that I must go abroad, and as it is uncertain when I will be able to return I am taking my family with me."

"That is too bad," said the Chicagoan, "but you really don't look ill at all; in fact, I should pick you out as a man of remarkably good health." "Yes, yes, I get no sympathy." said the German. My appearance belies the facts. I don't feel ill now, but I might be dead next minute. . I have heart disease, and my physician tells me that I may die at any moment. There is a fatty degeneration of the heart, or something of that sort, I do not know just what he calls it. Anyhow, he told me I must go to Baden, and that is my only hope. I am constantly in fear that I will not live to get there. Anyhow, I feel sure I never will re-

The Chicagoan moved a little uneasily in his chair, and as soon as opportunity offered to break off the conversation he retired to the smoker. where he breathed a sign of relief and attempted to divert his thoughts from the unfortunate German by smoking a cigar. He kept away from the German during the evening, and had almost forgotten about him when bedtime arrived. After he had got into his berth, however, the recollection of the German's presentiment occurred to him and interfered with his going to sleep. He tossed about for ome time rather nervously, but had begun to doze gently when he was suddenly aroused by the voice of a child. He sat up in his berth and heard the child's voice saying in a low, frightened

"Papa! papa!" It immediately occurred to him that the German had retired with his little boy in the same berth. He listened intently and again heard the child call his father. There was no response and no other sound in the car save the roar of the wheels and the occasional creaking of windows as the train turned around curves. The idea immediately struck the Chicagoan that possibly the German's presentiment had come true. Perhaps he had died in his sleep. The boy continued to call to his father, the voice becoming louder and more frightened as the calls failed to elicit any response. The Chicagoan was very much alarsed. Possibly the cigar had been too leavy, or his dinner did not sit well. He felt nervous, and unpleasant fancies would not leave him. He was almost certain that the German was dead. The thought of the little boy in the berth alone with the corpse of his father made him shiver. He didn't know what to do. He didn't want to arouse the other inmates of the car, and at the same time he felt that it was only humane to make an investigation. He rang the electric bell in the porter's room, but that worthy was probably asleep, for there was no response. After repeated efforts to get him the Chicagoan thrust his head out between the curtains and tried to look into the berth occupied by the German.

All he could see was a tiny hand thrust out between the curtains of the berth. The child was no longer calling, but was sobbing in a low, frightened voice. The Chicagoan got up. and, tiptoeing over to the berth, pulled the curtains aside. The German lay on his back, breathing gently, with his mouth slightly open. The Chica-goan returned to his berth and went to sleep. He said nothing to the German the next day, but he told his friends afterward that the suspense and fears of that night had spoiled his trip. He never found out whether the German reached his destination safely

rom the London Telegraph. The splendid bright yellow of the modern canaries was gained by carefully mating all those in which the rellow color showed most consplenously. But there are equally beautiful varieties which are neither green nor yellow, and yet have been established for nearly two centuries. To a naturalist the "permanence of the variations" should be almost as interesting as the permanence of type." The canaries, for example, are spangled all over the breast, back and shoulders with elegant spots of silver or gold tints. The "cinnamons" are of a me beautiful mixed tint of orange and mealy gray. Norwich canaries without crests are a brilliant yellow. Others are yellow or buff, with crests as regu-

Mr. G. Barnesby, in MS work on the canary, mentions a book published in 1709, in which twenty-eight varieties are mentioned comprising nearly all those of the present day. When perfection of form has been attained, perfection of color becomes the object of the canary exhibitor. Some of the little birds appear in orange plumage, which exceeds in depth and richness the colors of the orioles or tropical "Buff" is the name tanagers. which this tint is known to "the fancy," who, like most specialists, attach a different set of meanings to words in common use, when applied to the mysteries of their craft means by which this beautiful tint is conveyed to the plumage of a pale, almost primrose yellow, bird like the "Norwich plain" canary, is so mechan ical that if it were not for the part played by nature in transferring pigment from food to teachers, it would deserve classing with the manufacture of green carnations and blue roses by steeping the stems in dyed liquids.

When about nine or ten weeks old the young bird molts its first feathers completely and acquires the plumage of adult canaryhood. At this period the owner devotes all the cosmetic experience acquired in a thousand generations of canary coloring to artificially darken and enrich the tint of the new feathers. Probably there is no other creature in the world, not excluding the beauties of the east, which goes so thoroughly into training to gain a complexion, for the molt lasts for a couple of months, and during the whole time the cosmetic process is never neglected. It consists entirely in feeding the bird on food containing yellow coloring matter, mainly from natural vegetable dyes. The first step is to induce it to eat the flowers of marigolds. Canaries. like most other finches, are fond of pulling to pieces and eating the petals of flowers, and there is seldom much difficulty in teaching them to eat the brilliant blossoms. No morsel of green leaves is allowed in the cage, but fresh marigolds are given as long as they will touch them, the ardent "fancier being recommended to grow the flowers in relays in his garden. Saffron cake and saffron water form the solid and liquid accompaniments of the marigold flowers, to which eavenne-pepper is sometimes added. This gives an almost searlet shade to some of the feathers, but sometimes injures the health of the bird. But saffron seems perfectly harmless, and the canary eats and drinks the vellowdyed food as gaily as the sparrows steal the saffron fibres from the crocuses themselves in the early spring. Various patent "colorings" are also used, and are exhibited in front of the birds which have thrived on them like food and milk at a show of prize babies. Cochineal water is perhaps the deepest in tint of any food given, but this does not impart the characteristic red which it produces as a dye. As the shades of orange and yellow suffer from dust and dirt, canaries are most carefully bathed before exhibition. A shaving brush, warm water, and soft soap are the usual means em ployed, and a practical hand will wash canaries by the dozen, at the rate of seven or eight minutes each, transferring each bird after its final douche and rubbing with a soft cloth, into the drying cage, which stands before the fire. Precision and "boldness of attack" are the qualities for a successful washer; canaries, like babies, being apt to catch cold and become miserable if the process be unduly prolonged. "Color feeding" is, on the whole, the most anxious and exciting preliminary which Mr. Barnesby, in his authoritative work on the habits of his pets. has prefixed to his chapters on the sub-

FRUIT DRYING.

Before the process of canning became known, dried fruits were much more generally used than now. The change is in some respects unfortunate, for dried fruits, when the drying is carefully and intelligently done, are among the most healthful of all articles of diet, to exhibition, and fully deserves the and are recommended by some of our most distinguished physicians as being better for use, especially for children and invalids in hot weather, than even fresh fruits, unley hese can be had in an hour or two after gathering. Dried fruits really preserve much of the flavor and all the healthful properties of the chicken pot-pie made with Dr. Price's fresh fruits, without their liability to fermentation. This advantage they share with canned fruits, but the latter require to be cooked with a certain amount of sugar and both physicians and chemists are becoming more and more insistent upon the evils attending

In this way a good deal of fruit may be done at one time. The heat of the oven may be first tested by putting in a small portion of the fruit to be dried, as not only do different fruits require a different temperature, but even various sorts of the same fruit; a season has been wet or dry, that which is gathered in a dry season demanding not only a lower degree of heat, but a shorter time than that gathered in a Dried fruits should be excefully and nickly washed before cooking; quick , because none of the flavor should escape to be thrown away in the washing water. Then the fruit should be put into cold water, and allowed to sonk until it begins to plump out into something resembling its original proportions. Then put into a preserving cettle, set upon the fire, and bring to a quick seald, after which it may be set mack from the fire to where it will just simmer until done. Perhaps one of the chief reasons why dried fruits are so healthful is that they cannot be used without a good deal of cooking. This destroys the tendency to fermen tation, which is the bane of fresh fruits, especially those which have had to come far to market. If sugar is to be added, it may be done in a few minutes before removing from the fire, or wait until it is brought to the table where each person may suit himself as to quantity. It should be mentioned that all fruits-for all have sold qualitiesshould be cooked only in vessels which can impart no flavor. Agate-iron or iron with a porcelain lining, is good when new, but should not be used after the lining is at all broken. An earthenware preserving kettle in best.
